JAMES T. CASEY, COUNTY PIONEER, IS CALLED AWAY

On Sunday morning, January 5, 1930, the sad information was spoken from neighbor to neighbor in the whole north end of this county that James T. Casey had passed away, just after midnight, at St. Mary's hospital, San Francisco.

He had been well, quite himself, during the holiday period. On New Year's night he had argued with the writer to sit down and stay a little longer at his home, always a place of merriment. Then there was no thought of the great change, so near at hand.

On Friday evening at about six o'clock, he became very ill, complaining of a weakness of the heart. Mrs. Casey, his wife, called friends and together they concluded the condition of the sufferer was serious. A physician was summoned and he gave temporary relief. The distress returned, however, and during the night it became necessary to take him to the hospital, where everything to relieve the heart was done without avail until the end.

He was fully conscious during all the period of his suffering and in his usual way spoke to his friends and relatives endearingly. Occasionally he would say, "I shall go."

Thus the great life of James T. Casey came to an end, as he would have wished, without a long spell of sickness and not deserted by his faithful associates.

He was a native of Colma, his birthplace being close to the Skyline boulevard at the crest of the hills. His father and mother were among that band of bold pioneers who, as farmers, settled San Mateo county. He learned in his childhood all the disappointments and hardships of tilling the soil, and they were not a few. He also enjoyed its pleasures, like riding or driving a good horse.

He went to the country school, where it soon became evident that he was endowed with a superior intellect as he took the lead in his classes. Despite the primitive opportunities he became fairly informed.

As soon as he was old enough the force of circumstances and his own inclination urged him to go to work, away from his home. His first employment was driving a milk wagon for Hall's Dairy, where he met many other young men, all of whom remained his loyal supporters throughout his career. His friendliness, dignifed bearing, assertiveness, and good-natured persistence in the accomplishment of his objects gradually gave him an acknowledged leadership over his companions that attracted public attention. The politicians and others became glad to cultivate his friendship. Very soon he was in the game of local government himself. From the beginning to the end he was an unflinching Democrat, carrying its banner in victory and defeat.

In 1886, when he was little more than just old enough, he became a candidate for supervisor of the First township against the incumbent, A. F. Green, a Republican leader of the time. It was considered a hopeless fight for him at the beginning, but before it ended he marshalled such a folowing that the opposition was compelled to use all the resources in order to beat him.

The years went by and he worked here and there, at all kinds of occupation, gaining much experience and little else. About the year 1898 he went into the laundry business and at once worked up a profitable trade. From the laundry business he stepped into the butcher shop at Colma in partnership at first with Benjamin F. Green. Promptly his shop became very popular, supplying nearly every one with choice meats.

The old political longing was still in him. In 1902 he made the campaign for the legislature of the state, seeking the office of assemblyman against Henry W. Brown. The prospects were all wrong for him; nevertheless he came very nearly winning, surprising everybody with the big support given him. Two years later he ran for supervisor of his township again and met with another defeat, this time by only eight votes. It is not necessary to say that campaign was decidedly exciting.

During the campaign he became the sole owner of the butcher business and the "White House," a well known resort, fell into his hands, as a political liability, so it seemed for awhile.

In 1905 the building of the Ocean Shore Railroad created a local boom and Colma was its distributing point. Jim Casey's butcher shop and the White House and livery stable adjacent became locations of great activity. The proprietor met and conversed with the financiers, the civil engineers, the contractors, the real estate promoters, the bosses and the straw bosses, the skinners, the teamster, and the prize fight manager. Those were busy times for him, and the profits were encouraging, although he never took the time to count the day's receipts.

Thus ended 1905 and begun 1906, until the morning of the earthquake of April 18, 1906. That was a real upset, but he did not hesitate. When the stream of refugees began to pour into Colma, he foresaw the need of meat and ordered from the Western Meat Co. all he could get. At a reasonable cash price he sold it for one day, when the soldiers took command of it and gave it away. Even their action satisfied him, although it meant loss to him.

After the excitement of the earthquake and fire was over, he was one of the first to begin restoring things and resuming business in the normal way. Now he was really a state character, known to a great many people, and it was his pride to remember every one of them.

He was ready for the campaign of 1908 for supervisor of the First township. Everybody knew him favorably. The population had begun to change and increase greatly. New communities were coming into prominence. An active fight was made and his slogan was "Good roads and lights." Of course he was elected and the rejoicing of his followers over his victory was something remarkable. It was actually a manifestation of genuine love.

As supervisor of the county, he served the people with never a thought of himself or his business. There was much to be done. He was the admitted leader. First the new county court house was completed and next electric lights were introduced in Colma and what is now Daly City, and the route of the State highway was brought this way without local taxation. He recognized that the day of the dirt road and the old horse was ended. He saw the conquest of gaso-

HIGH SCHOOL HAS 32 NEW STUDENTS

The new year at Jefferson Union high school begins under favorable auspices. The freshman class just entering numbers thirty-two. This brings the total enrollment for the year up to 353, the largest enrollment in the history of the school.

The program for the new students was arranged by Superintendent W. J. Savage and Principal Ferguson previous to the opening of the new term and consists of Typewriting, Sewing, or Art, English, General Mathematics, General Science, Civics and Physical Education. This has required the addition of eight class periods to the program of the school, and has been taken care of without any additions to the faculty.

Principal James Ferguson extended a welcome to the incoming class. He congratulated the pupils on their promotion to high school and expressed his pleasure at the increased facilities which the high school had provided during the past term, and which are now available. He spoke particularly of the new auto mechanics building, with its excellent equipment, the increased equipment in the science laboratories and in the commercial department, additional library facilities, including many new reference books. He also spoke of the very superior facilities for physical education offered by the high school.

"Every student," he said, "as well as every teacher, appreciates the efforts of the High school trustees in providing Jefferson High with an athletic field which is equal to the best in California."

He asked the students to co-operate with the Board of Trustees in its additional effort to make the entire high school grounds the pride of the district. New lawns are being grown, and much additional shrubbery planted.

Principal Ferguson gave the new students three rules to follow to make them happy in school.

First: Always prepare your lessons thoroughly.

Second: Never be trady or absent.

Third: Be a good citizen at all times, whether you are in the presence of a teacher or not.

Fololwing these rules, he said, would not only make pupils happy, but would insure success for them in after life, because it would enable them to acquire the education which success in modern life demands.

The new shrubs which are being planted on the high school grounds were donated by Mr. Matt Jensen, as were all of the previous plantings. Mr. Jensen's interest in the high school is appreciated by every member of the school and by the community at large.

The installation of the new electric lights on the grounds is almost complete. This improvement will add to the beauty of the front lawns, and will also be greatly appreciated by the night school pupils who, heretofore, have had to park their cars in the dark.

K. OF C. PUT OVER SUCCESSFUL SHOW

Everybody is talking about the glorious vaudeville and photoplay show offered at the Daly City Theatre last Wednesday night by the Knights of Columbus.

This entire bill was built and given gratis to the Knights, who pronounced it the finest vaudeville and film bill ever offered in the district. All of the acts, which were booked from the Phil Frease Booking Agency, five in number, were built into a massive presentation idea by Arthur Ward, of the agency, who also offered his comedy novelty juggling and dancing act. All acts that participated were of Orpheum circuit calibre, and composed of French and Parish, two clever black birds; The Big Three, three big boys with singing voices of exceptional merit; Blum and Duel in "Bits of Nonsense;" Kleo Lambert and Company; the Cameo Review, six very clever dancing girls who present their dances along the type made famous by the English Rocketts; Minerva Eureka, who formerly was leading lady for the now famous Kolb and Dill; Little Teedy Hall, the singing, dancing and saxophone girl, who came up from the Fanchon and Marco Fox Idea, and Arthur Ward himself in his extremely funny comedy act.

Gilbert Green and his Vaudeville orchestra were in the pit and handled the bill without a slip.

The film portion of the bill included a first run showing of Rod La Rocque and a delightful cast of players in Radio Pictures' breezy story of the South Seas, "The Delightful Rogue," a Paramount comedy, the Gleson's in "Meet the Missuss," and the Paramount Silent News Events. Larry Sutton was at the organ.

The Knights and all of those in attendance complimented the theatre and its management highly for bringing and staging this show of exceptional merit, with everybody happy, and exclaiming: "The best show ever in the district."

CHILDREN ENTERTAIN INMATES OF RELIEF HOME

The old folks of the San Mateo county relief home were highly entertained last Friday by children from General Pershing school, who sang, danced, and played various kinds of musical instruments to the obvious delight of the inmates.

Those who took part in bringing a ray of sunshine and gladness into the drab lives of those old people were, Catherine Catch, Grace Lyons, Raymond Sordelli, Norma Evans, Alice Cuneo, Alicia Fields, Beatrice Cuneo, Myrtle Chandler, Charlie Deskins, Patricia O'Neil, Jack Cosbie, Bob Christian, George, Ben and Lucille Young, Leon and Lillibell Fletcher.

Oranges and candy were provided by the P. T. A., and Mr Catch, of 136 Winchester street, very generously donated boxes of cookies, which were distributed to the old people.

The president of the P. T. A. wishes to thank the following ladies who so kindly gave their time, and automobiles for transportation, and in other ways assisted her in carrying this through. Mrs. Lyons, Mrs. Deskins, Mrs. Christian, Mrs. Catch, Mrs. O'Neil, Mrs. Cosbie, and Mrs. Howard Young.

HIGH SPOTS IN A SUMMER'S TRAVEL

"High Spots in a Summer's Travel" was the subject of an address delivered by Principal James Ferguson of our local high school before the Open Forum of San Francisco at its regular weekly meeting on last Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson spent last summer in Europe, visiting particularly Paris and its environs and the British Isles.

While in Washington, D. C., they were received by Mrs. Hoover in the White House. Mr. Ferguson became acquainted with Mrs. Hoover at Stanford University when she was a student there. Speaking of Mrs. Hoover as first lady of the land, Mr. Ferguson said that she possesses the same personal charm of unaffected manner and democratic simplicity that she possessed when she was a student at Stanford University. During the visit she and Mrs. Ferguson talked about their children and grandchildren with the same heart devotion that would be shown by any two mothers meeting in a friendly visit. Mr. Ferguson said he was interested in Mrs. Hoover's wonderful grasp of public questions and problems confronting the American people, and particularly those coming within the range of duties of President Hoover.

"She is in touch with all the details of the President's work in a remarkable way. For instance," he said, "I made complimentary reference to an address made by the President before a body of newspaper men in New York a few days before, and she discussed it, showing familiarity with every detail of the addess."

In summing up his personal estimate of President and Mrs. Hoover, Mr. Ferguson said: "They are products of our soil, true Americans, of whom we can justly be proud both at home and abroad."

While in London Mr. Ferguson had an interview with General Dawes, United States Ambassador to Great Britain.

"General Dawes is such a man as you would expect President Hoover to choose to represent the United States of America at the Court of St. James," was the way in which Mr. Ferguson characterized our British Ambassador. "A scholar, an economist noted especially in the subject of banking, an engineer of marked accomplishment both before and during the World war, a statesman, a diplomat—and encircling all of these qualities, a delightful gentleman. Mr. Ferguson described General Dawes in his London office. He was sitting at his desk on the day he called, smoking his famous pipe while finishing a Fourth of July speech he was to deliver in London the next day. Mr. Ferguson apologized for calling at such a busy time. "Not busy at all, Mr. Ferguson. There are some things I want to talk to you about," he replied, at the same time apologizing for taking another minute to finish the last paragraph of his address.

"We discussed several questions of mutual interest to the United States and Great Britain, and soon the secreary came to the door and announced that General Dawes' barber had arrived. I wanted to withdraw at that time, but he insisted upon my staying. So the barber spread a sheet on the floor around Mr. Dawes' chair, and began cutting his hair, while the General continued smoking his famous pipe and talking to me.

"General Dawes had often been a puzzle to me because of press dispatches which at times dealt with him in a serious manner and at other times humorously. The humor was in connection with his famous 'Hell and Maria' remark and with his so-called effort to reform the United States Senate. Since then I have become convinced that the real humor was either a deliberate product of General Dawes or else he chose that method of calling attention to the fact that the United States needed reforming—but is beyond all hope of reformation, so far as its rules of procedure are concerned.

"A few days before I was in London press dispatches announced that the American Ambassador would break away from precedent and would not wear knee breeches at Court functions, and I wondered what the effect would be among the British people. After I met General Dawes and had time to analyze the man in the light of his personality, I concluded that through him Europe would become aware without offense that the United States has become grown-up."

Mr. Ferguso ncalled attention to the fact that General Dawes is a direct descendant of the gentleman named Dawes who shared equal honors with Paul Revere in warning the colonists of the coming of the British at Lexington. "So," he remarked, "the present Dawes family inherits American ideals from an ancestry of which any American might justly be proud."

In discussing Verdun and the battlefields of the Argonne, which were visited on the trip, Mr. Ferguson remarked that no sane man could visit such scenes, contemplating the amount of human misery involved, without being an enemy of war.

Mr. Ferguson described in some detail some of the beauty spots of England, Ireland, and Scotland, dwelling particularly on the land of Robert Burns.

The address was listened to with rapt attention and given generous applause.

REDISTRICTING PETITION COMES BEFORE BOARD

A petition signed by nearly 3,500 electors of the First, Second and Third townships, asking for relocation of bounderies of the five supervisorial districts of San Mateo county, was formally filed with the board of supervisors at the first meeting of 1930, last Monday, by John F. Davis, Burlingame city attorney and attorney for the petitioners.

Davis did not appear in person before the board, but submitted a letter of explanation with the petition and also an ordinance modeled by the redistricting group.

The petition was not taken up, however, because of the injunction suit filed by Danta Diandi, Montara rancher, who seeks to prevent the board from caling a special election.

An order to show cause why the injunction should not be granted was issued by Superior Judge George H. Buck, citing the board to appear in court Thursday morning for further action.

Moving to prevent a disaster at he Beresford Community hospital similar to those that struck hospitals throughout the United States in 1929, the board will hold a conference with Wiliam Toepke, San Mateo architect, next Monday, to discuss the temporary isolation of the inflammable X-ray films and the addition of the badly needed new wing to the hospital.

At the next meeting Toepke will be instructed to prepare plans for a future permament place for the films in addition to the new wing. The total job will cost $150,000, Supervisor Hickey estimated, and will be included in the 1930-31 budget.

Plans and specifactions for the new road to the Memorial Redwood park from Alpine were adopted by the board, and bids called for the contract. The bids will be opened February 3. County Surveyor Geo. A. Kneese estimates the job will cost $30,000.

On the request of Attorney Hall Ross, representing petitioners, the board promised that proposed improvements to the La Honda road, from the Skyline boulevard to the village of Bellvale, would be provided for by a levy when the new tax rates are drawn up in September.

Fifty-four residents of the Millbrae Villa tract petitioned for modern fire protection and water service in Millbrae.

A letter from the Millbrae Development association stated that the Villa petition conflicted with a petition of its own for street improvements, fire protection and water service, now being circulated.

The developement body requested that the petition be held up for two weeks, which was granted by the board.

The San Mateo Daily Times was voted the official county paper for 1930 on motion of Supervisor Manuel Francis, seconded by Supervisor Hickey.

The contract for furnishing lights in the Milbrae Highlands district was awarded the only bidder, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Hearing on renewals of 26 soft drink licenses was set for January 20. The resignation of Raymond E. Wilson as commissioner of the Bayshore fire district was received, and C. J. Quinn appointed as successor.

The 1929 report of the county chamber of commerce was filed with the board, and a 90-day extension granted the Union Paving company to complete improvements in Blossom Heath Manor, San Mateo.

KNIGHTS MOURN LOSS OF CHARTER MEMBER

After all business on hand was completed, Daly City Council, K. of C., closed their regular meeting on Tuesday evening out of respect for their departed brother and charter member, James T. Casey, pioneer of Colma. Under the auspices of the local Council, a requiem mass will be said for the repose of his soul on Sunday, February 2, at 7 a. m., in Honly Angels' church, Colma.

At this time the Council wishes to thank everyone to whom they are indebted for the success of their theatre party, held last Wednesday evening at the Daly City Theatre.

line and to provide for the rubber tires he dared to advocate and fight for a bond issue of $1,250,000 to build county roads of the modern type. There was opposition but it was overcome. The issue was carried and the county network of roads was built. This was the outstanding forward move made in our county and helped greatly to make the county what it is today.

When the million and a quarter were spent and the new roads were being enjoyed, the highest compliment that was paid to the board of supervisors was that the huge sum of money had been spent and the work was done without the suspicion of graft. To Mr. Casey that was real satisfaction.

He was re-elected for a second term and enjoyed the signal honor of being supervisor throughout the World's Fair period, doing good work for the county all the time. His home at this time was the meeting place for all, the rich and poor. He was considerate of every one. Many an unfortunate blessed him for his generosity. Many another person said he was a prince because he refused to accept a reward for a favor.

He ran for a third term in 1916, but owing to political complications and antagonisms created by his natural assertiveness, he was defeated by the present incumbent, Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey. Although defeated, he retained his public standing to the end.

Throughout his whole career there was never an issue before the people in which he did not take an active interest. He was always thinking in behalf of progress. His ambition was to make conditions better, and in no small measure he was successful. Who will take his place now?

His last political campaign was in behalf of the Democratic party and Alfred E. Smith in this county. He carried the fight into almost every precinct and the results showed he still had wonderful power of organization.

Among his associates he was decidedly loveable. It was impossible to know him without feeling inclined to assist him in his efforts. His conversation was so sensible and cheerful that it was welcome always, sometimes so fascinating that you could not get away.

During his younger days he enjoyed all social gatherings and attended many. Of late his greatest pleasure was at home with a few of his near and dear ones, but if he heard of any old friend's being sick he was sure to call, before it was too late. He felt it was his duty to be present at the funeral of every person he had known intimately and he seldom was absent.

When a young man he married Margaret Sweeney, a native of Ohio, who survives him. They were favored with four children, one of whom died in childhood. Elise, the oldest, is now Mrs. J. Frank Barrett of San Mateo; Marjorie, the second, Mrs. R. D. Savage of Half Moon Bay; and J. L. Casey of Colma.

The funeral tok place on Tuesday from Lasswell's chapel under the auspices of the Catholic church of Colma.

Many sincere friends unite in offering their sympathy to the bereaved relatives.

"THE KEY TO SUCCESS" AT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

"You not only have to have the key to success to get on in life, but you also have to be able to find the keyhole!"

If you come out to the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening at 7:45, the pastor will tell not only how to find the keyhole, but will tell you how to find the key. This is especially a sermon for young people. Rev. Stevenson believes that young people are being misjudged in these days. People are saying that they have to be amused—that they can't get them out to church—that they won't do any more thinking than they have to. He believes that young people are interested in the profund things of the Christian faith, and he is spending his time teaching them so. Come out and hear the best church music—on the organ by Mildred Roof; on the piano by Mildred Swan; and various vocal selections by the talented of the community.

ROYAL AMBASSADORS A CLUB FOR BOYS

PASTOR ANNOUNCES INTERESTING TOPICS

Rev. Charles Woessner, pastor of the Calvary Baptist Mission, announces that the topic for the sermon next Sunday morning will be "One Debt That the World Never Paid." Sunday night he will discuss "A Case of Bad Judgment." The topic for five minute discussion Sunday night will be, "Who Are Angels and What Are They For Anyway?" The Wednesday evening prayer meeting topic will be, "The Prophecies of Christ and Their Fulfillment."

Following the morning sermon, The Lord's Supper will be held.

On Friday at the Calvary Baptist Mission, at 8 p. m., Mr. William Savidge, Director of Music, will continue the study of "The Bible: It's Christ and Modernism." His Friday night topic will be, "How Do We Know the Bible is Inspired of God?" Mr. Savidge has had years of special training in the interpretation of the Bible, which makes him an interesting and capable teacher. These studies will be continued every Friday night. The public is urged to make use of these studies concerning the vital questions of the Bible.

THE EAGLES NEST

The regular weekly meeting of the Fraternal Order of Eagles was held on Thursday evening.

Brother Johnson was reported as leaving St. Luke's hospital and well on the way to recovery. Brother Reardon is still at St. Luke's and is convelescing. Brothers Louiga and Ferrari were still on the sick list, but reported recovering.

The Booster committee reported some interesting doings that will come off in the near future.

The installation, which promises to be the biggest one ever held, will be put on January 18. If you haven't your application in, get it in as soon as possible. An entertainment and feed is in the making for that night also.

The Associated Aeries will meet in South San Francisco on February 28.

Past Worthy Grand President Ryan of Philadelphia will visit Daly City and the Peninsula on February 22. A monster meeting is planned, for we remember Brother Ryan, who visited us last year as Grand President.

A committee of Eagles will go to San Jose on January 21 as good will emissaries. Brothers Rodenberger and Adams of Daly City are members of the committee, with Sharkey of Redwood City, and Dr. Bogel of San Mateo.

The Eagles extend to Mrs. Casey and family their heartfelt sympathy in their recent bereavement.

What is the matter with the social fund?

What is that odor coming from the secretary's desk? Someone said it was Kunze's cigar. Was it?

What committee reported PROGRESS?

JEFFERSON FIVE OPPOSE BALBOA

Two big rivals from little schools, Jefferson and Balboa, will battle for supremancy on the basketball court today when the unlimited quintets clash in the new $350,000 Balboa gymnasium. The game is scheduled for 4 o'clock, immediately after the dedication ceremony.

Jefferson's starting aggregation is composed of Jack Gibbons, center; Hughie Smith and Richard Varney, forwards; Bill Gibbons and Glenvin Meadows, guards. Other members of the squad are Hooten, Opperman and Mundy, forwards; Brush and Harper, guards; and Davis, center.

Coach Biaginni does not hold very high hopes for the Jefferson team. He said: "The boys have a fighting chance to win, but I think the Balboa quintet will prove their superiority due to the helpful practice they can hold."

Before vacation the South San Francisco team won from the Indians' unlimiteds 20-16. This game showed the ability of the Jefferson players. Their defense held the opponent in check until the last minute of play, but the offensiev power was missing.

Speed! And More Speed!

An analysis of the striking events of the news of the world has been sent us by Rev. John Stevenson, of the Daly City Presbyterian church. The whole thing seems to be boiled down to speed and power. The analysis is as follows:

Orlebar, an English aviator, flew a seaplane at the rate of 357 miles an hour, faster than any human ever traveled in the history of the world.

Seagrave, an English auto racer, drove an automobile at the rate of 231 miles a hour. Faster than any autoist ever traveled before.

The Bremen, a German liner, crossed the Atlantic in 4 days 17 hours. Faster than any ship ever made this trip before.

Lieutenant Soucek, an American aviator, reached the highest altitude ever reached by man when he flew his plane 39,140 feet up into the sky.

An airplane flown by Jackson and O'Brien remained in the air for 17 days and a half. No one hitherto accomplished this.

Captain Hawkes crossed from New York to Los Angeles in 19 hours 12 minutes. Faster than ever before.

And finally, Simpson, of Ohio State University, ran 100 yards in 9 and five-tenths seconds, breaking another world speed record.

To sum up: The world last year made its supreme effort in the realm of mechanical power. All other efforts, such as the field of literature, music, architecture, real honest-to-goodness thinking, etc., contributed little to the advancement of the world. Culture today is taking a vacation. We have lots of education (of an inferior quality). But speed and power, that is what the world wants. It does not matter where you are going so long as you get there in a hurry.

Rev. Stevenson acknowledges the San Francisco News for much of the material in his compilation.

What is perhaps the first rabbit fatality caused by an airplane is reported from Goodwater, Alabama, where an army flyer crashed a few days ago. A dead rabbit was found under the wreckage.

President-elect Rubio of Mexico is taking a rest and treatment at the Mayo clinic in Rochester, Minn., after which he will visit President Hoover before returning home for his inauguration.

Dorothy's Mother Proves Claim

Children don't ordinarily take to medicines but here's one that all of them love. Perhaps it shouldn't be called a medicine at all. It's more like a rich, concentrated food. It's pure, wholesome, sweet to the taste and sweet in your child's little stomach. It builds up and strengthens weak, puny, underweight children, makes them eat heartily, brings the roses back to their cheeks, makes them playful, energetic, full of life. And no bilious, headachy, constipated, feverish, fretful baby or child ever failed to respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup on their little bowels. It starts lazy bowels quick, cleans them out thoroughly, tones and strengthens them so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Millions of mothers know about California Fig Syrup from experience. A Western mother, Mrs. J. G. Moore, 119 Cliff Ave., San Antonio, Texas, says: "California Fig Syrup is certainly all that's claimed for it. I have proved that with my little Dorothy. She was a bottle baby and very delicate. Her bowels were weak. I started her on Fig Syrup when she was a few months old and it regulated her, quick. I have used it with her ever since for colds and every little set-back and her wonderful condition tells better than words how it helps."

Don't be imposed on. See that the Fig Syrup you buy bears the name, "California" so you'll get the genuine, famous for 50 years.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Construction work on the California-Oregon Power Company's transmission line between Yreka and Fort Jones is expected to be completed by the first of next year, Orlo G. Steele, resident manager, has announced. The company is expending approximately $50,000 in rebuilding the line. A further extension is planned to run from Fort Jones to Etna but this is not expected to be undertaken until next summer.

Monterey Board of Supervisors ordered the county surveyor to purchase supplies for construction of a bridge across the Salinas River near San Lucas. The present structure is said to be unsafe and the board is reported to have taken this action because of the recent heavy rains. Reed & Corlett, Oakland architects, were granted a contract for architectural and engineering services for the drawing of plans for the new county detention home and county jail, which will be under construction early this year.

The Railroad Commission approved a contract between San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation and the United States Department of the Interior covering sale of surplus electric energy to the power company by the Yosemite Park power plant, and the sale by the company of electric energy to the Department of the Interior to supplement the production of the park power plant.

A steam shovel on the Carmel-San Simeon highway unearthed evidence between Villa and Alder creeks that many years ago an Indian village by the sea was obliterated by a landslide. The shovel brought to light skeletons, tomahawk heads, pieces of buckskin thongs, a stone mortar, arrow heads, pestles and other relics. Skeletons in prone position afforded proof that the village was buried by a landslide for it was the Indian custom to bury the dead in a sitting posture with knees drawn up under the chin. H. L. Leventon, in charge of construction, is sending a description of the articles to the department of ethnology, University of California.

A price of $126,000 has been placed on the Fresno Civic Auditorium by the city commission for sale to the state as an armory site. An appraisal of the building will be made, and if the building is found satisfactory its acquisition will be recommended to the 1931 legislature. In event of the sale of the old auditorium a new and larger building will be erected there by the city for civic activities.

Its momentum unchecked by the recent stock market crisis coupled with sharp declines in security values, California business today swung into the windup of an unprecedented prosperity year. November, even with its dark days of market upheaval, witnessed the filing of 532 applications for permits authorizing sale of securities within the state, an infallible barometer of California's financial stability. Unimpeded, this brisk impetus continues apace as December winds up the year's prosperity volume. These high-lights of a survey of California business, prepared by Arthur H. Garland, state commisioner of corporations, and A. A. Rosenshine bank superintendent, cheered administration leaders when presented to Governor Young's council of department chiefs. "From our survey, it was revealed that California business, generally, is not discouraged by the stock market collapse, and its financing programs, through public offerings of securities, evidence a hopeful sign of confidence," Commissioner Garland reported. A similar message of optimism was submitted to state leaders by Superintendent Rosenshine. Another business barometer was contained in the report of E. Forrest Mitchell, insurance commissioner, announcing that sixty-two insurance companies have been admitted to the state since the first of the year, a record activity in this field.

Public education in California during the school year 1927-1928 totaled $160,576,206, of which $37,519,159 was invested in capital outlays including land, buildings and permanent equipment, Vierling Kersey, superintendent of public instruction, reported recently. He obtained his figures from compilations made by Walter E. Morgan, statistician for the State Department of Education. The total current cost of maintaining schools for the year was estimated at $123,057,047. The total expense for the current operation of schools represented an expenditure of somewhat less than $93 for each person enrolled in the public scohols. The amounts invested during the year in capital outlays represented a per capita cost of $28 and the estimated value of all school properties represented a total investment of approximately $320 per capita enrolled during the school year.

A decrease in industrial deaths and in the number of workers permanently injured during the last fiscal year was reported to Governor C. C. Young by Will J. French of the state department of industrial relations. Fatalities last year totaled 625. French informed the governor, compared with 682 the previous year, 763 in 1926-27 and 710 for 1925-26. A reduction of 79 in permanent injuries was reported, the figure 1028 comparing with 1107 in 1927-28.

The State Board of Equalization reported Kern County railroads worth $10,980,999 for rate fixing purposes.

RULE IS FAVORED ON SUBSTITUTES

Football Coaches and Others Would Limit Changes.

Prominent football men, including several coaches, favor a new rule which would curb the wholesale use of substitutes during a game. It has become a practice that does not appeal to spectators who naturally are confused by the great number of changes made in the opposing lineups. Some of the smaller colleges which are limited to twenty-odd players are opposed to the methods of bigger and stronger rivals. In at least one instance a leading coach has used as many as 35 men in four periods of gridiron activity.

Unless a player is seriously injured advocates of the proposed rule say he should be compelled to remain in his position from start to finish. In other days when halves of 45 minutes each were played, it was customary for varsity teams to go through a whole game without calling in substitutes. No player could be withdrawn for a rest and then return to his place on the team. Football then was far more strenuous than the present game which seems to be burdened with too many rules.

Pacific Coast Conference teams will engage in intersectional football games in 1930, it was disclosed after the schedule makers had partly completed plans for next year.

Stanford meets Minnesota at Minneapolis on October 11 and Dartmouth at Stanford on November 29. California is dickering for a game with either the Navy or Yale, to be played at Berkeley. Southern California meets Notre Dame at Los Angeles on November 27. Oregon and Drake clash at Chicago on October 4, and Oregon State and West Virginia play at Chicago on November 27.

F. H. Palmer, Canadian trade commissioner for Scandinavia, won the amateur golf championship of Norway and his wife reached the finals in the Norway ladies' tournament.

University of Nebraska has turned down an offer for a football game with Minnesota at Minneapolis.

Charles Paddock has been doing sprint stunts for so long that he has Old Pop Time worried. Believe it or not, the blond Texan, a transplanted Californian, hopes to make the 1932 Olympic team.

"I lost about eight yards on my last Olympic voyage, but maybe the old legs still will be good enough to land me a place on a relay team," said Charlie. "At least I do not intend to quit running altogether."

Bowling is a great help to golf, according to Mrs. R. J. McCutcheon, most famous woman bowler. She cited the case of Miss Phyllis Buchanan of Colorado, who failed to make much progress at golf for a time due to weak wrists. She was asked to try bowling, hesitated, then accepted the invitation.

"Miss Buchanan, after a few months of bowling, returned to golf," explained Mrs. McCutcheon, "and later gained the runner-up position in the Woman's Colorado golf championship. She attributed much of her success to bowling, which proved an excellent wrist strengthener."

Among the most successful gridiron coaches this past year who are representatives of the Notre Dame school of football are Jimmy Phelan of Purdue, Adam Walsh, line coach at Yale, and E. P. "Slip" Madigan of St. Mary's.

New Yorkers have a chance this winter to see a sport innovation that should provide amusement that has not been equaled in these United States in many a day.

Female ice hockey—and professional at that—is the scheme that is now hatching in the purlieus of Madison Square Garden. This hazardous game is an outgrowth, of course, of the interest American women have manifested in ice racing in recent years, culminating in the formation of clubs in and around New York and other cities for the promotion of woman's ice races.

The present proposal is to form a four-team league in New York and see what happens.

The scheduling of a game between St. Mary's college of Oakland, Calif., and Fordham university, to be played at the New York Polo grounds November 15, 1930, provides an attractive addition to next season's intersectional schedule.

The St. Mary's team, five times winner of the Far West conference championship, has never before appeared on an Eastern gridiron.

"Sure, I'm a baseball catcher, but that doesn't mean I'd be a catcher in the ring," explained Gordon (Mickey) Cochrane, Philadelphia Athletic catcher, in defending his anounced intention of having a whirl at boxing.

"If this fellow Shires, who doesn't know anything about boxing, can pick up a couple of thousand dollars and a rich vaudeville contract for fighting a couple of punks, there is no reason why I can't make myself a little extra money. I boxed as a middleweight at Boston university and I'm willing to spot Shires a dozen pounds and fight him," Cochrane said. "When we get in the ring I'll do the pitching and let him do the catching."

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

What was it that Mrs. Fred E. Schmitt of 2023 Stone Street, Falls City, Nebraska, discovered, which she could give to her baby that made her happy, well, strong and buoyant?

Not a medicine; not a drug of any kind; just harmless bodily lubrication. Only that, and nothing more. ACCIDENTS OF MENTAL ORIGIN

Ninety per cent of accidents are of mental origin, according to Dr. Harold S. Hulbert of the Department of Mental and Nervous Diseases, University of Illinois.

In an address before the National Safety Council, Dr. Hulbert explained that these accidents are the result not of insanity or mental incompetence, but of thoughtlessness or carelessness.

This authority says that a person who is comfortable in body and mind, adjusted to his working and domestic life, and is not ill, discontented or fatigued, stands but a small chance of becoming the causative factor in an accident. On the other hand, anger, fatigue, surprise and other such factors are the causes of many accidents, says Dr. Hulbert.

We cannot, of course, cure such emotional disturbances as anger and surprise, nor can we offset fatigue, but the public should understand these causes of accidents and guard against them. A worker who grows tired should become more careful because of it. An automobile driver who is suffering from some slight illness should watch his driving more carefully than when he is in good health. Once we manage to exert some control over the "mental hazard," our accident record will begin to decrease.

SELLING BAD STOCKS

With utter disregard for blue sky laws, one citizen of New York is selling worthless stocks with impunity, according to a writer in Grit, and has made a fortune doing it. But this vendor of bad securities is different from many others. He guarantees that the stocks he sells are absolutely without value, after buying them with the same understanding.

This odd broker, R. M. Smythe, now 72 years old, has long been an authority on stocks, and has the history of about 300,000 dead corporations. For forty-five years he has been consulted by persons holding securities and when he convinces them that their handsome stock certificates have no value, sometimes buys them at a nominal figure.

Then he sells them to bankers for window displays, to colleges for study, or to faddists who use them to paper their rooms. But always he gives his guarantee that they are no good from a financial standpoint.

It is said that 500 psychologists are studying the child problem. And any 500 mothers could tell them more than they will ever find out otherwise.

EVADING GAS TAXES

Because of the lack of uniformity among the states in the matter of gasoline taxes, a considerable traffic in what is termed "bootleg" gasoline has grown up, in spite of all efforts of officials to suppress it. At this time there are a number of men being charged with "bootlegging" gasoline in this state, and they will probably face trial for their actions.

The plan is, of course, to buy gasoline in a state with a low tax, transport it across the line and sell it in the state having a higher tax, without reporting the sale to the authorities. This has been done on a large scale by means of tank wagons, but through increased vigilance by state inspectors, a great many such law violators in different sections have been apprehended and made to pay the tax and a fine besides.

In Missouri alone, $178,574 in evaded taxes and fines was collected duirng the last four years, while no one knows how many of the "bootleggers" escaped detection.

The practice will no doubt continue to a greater or less extent as long as different gasoline tax rates exist among the several states.

THE UNCONSCIOUS ARSONIST

Some millions of Americans are unconscious arsonists. This is a startling statement, and any one of the millions would angrily deny it. Yet it is true. None of them purposely set fires. But all of them, through ignorance or carelessness, unconsciously start fires.

The difference between the man who consciously fires a house, and the man who allows wiring to go unattended, throws oil-soaked rags in corners, or drops his matches and cigarettes wherever he happens to finish with them, is one of law and motive, not of effect.

We are, with increasing success, fighting the active arsonist, and when he is caught he is imprisoned for long terms. The unconscious arsonist is beyond the law and destroys more lives and property than the deliberate arsonist.

Every fire hazard imperils the entire community. A fire starting in a disused garage may destroy a million dollar factory. Are you an unconscious arsonist?

MISSING SHIPS AND MEN

Loss of life by accident or through a general disaster is somehow more shocking to relatives and friends of the victims than death from disease. This is perhaps due to the suddenness of the bereavement, for which those left behind are unprepared.

Most terrible of all is the mental agony of those whose loved ones disappear without leaving behind anything to indicate their exact fate. The history of the sea is filled with such occurrences, in many of which hundreds of lives were lost in a single disaster.

One of the earliest cases after the development of large vessels was that of the City of Glasgow, bound from Liverpool to Philadelphia in March, 1854, and was never heard of after sailing. She carried 450 passengers.

Other vessels carrying 150 or more persons which likewise disappeared without leaving a trace behind include the Tempest in 1857, the City of Boston in 1870, the British training ship Atlanta in 1880, the liner Naronic (lost on her maiden voyage) in 1893, the Warath in 1909.

Perhaps the most mysterious disappearance at sea was that of the United States Navy collier Cyclops, of 19,300 tons displacement and carrying 293 men, which left Barbadoes, West India, on March 4, 1918, never to be seen again. During the remainder of the war it was thought that her crew might have been captured and imprisoned by the Germans, but at its close they declared that their ships had never seen the Cyclops.

The anxietty, hopes and fears of relatives of these 293 men can better be imagined than described. The sea still keeps its secrets.

Although many more battles remain to be fought, it is encouraging to note the remarkable progress which has been made in the war against tuberculosis during the last twenty-five years, in which the death rate has been cut in half.

In 1904 there were only 9,107 beds available for tuberculosis patients in hospitals and sanatoria in the United States, as compared with 73,695 beds in 1929.

Much of this advance is due to the work of the National Tuberculosis Association during the quarter of a century of its existence. By emphasizing the need for rest, fresh air, proper food, sanitary living and working conditions, as well as the need for suitable institutions for the treatment of cases in their various stages, this association has made a wonderful contribution to the public welfare.

But there are still 500,000 cases of tuberculosis in the United States. The work of the association, supported by the sale of Christmas Health Seals, must go on.

HONORS FOR SERVICE

Highly pleasing is a bit of news from Florence, Italy, to the effect that gold medals have been awarded by that famous city to two American young women, Misses Mary and Janet Buttles, of Washington. They also received official commendation from the Italian government.

These marks of recognition came after several years of unselfish service in behalf of the poor children of Florence, for whom the two sisters established a nursery and training school, where working mothers could place them during the day.

Many hundreds of children have received care and instruction since this work was begun in 1925, and the high value placed upon this enterprise by the Italian authorities is indicated by the bestowal of the honors mentioned.

It was a noble impulse which prompted these young women to engage in such an undertaking, and it is good to know that their labors have received suitable recognition.

We read that America has about 200 dialects, and it seems that our radio has mastered them all.

Pity the poor fellow in Berlin who had to draw his own beer when the waiters went on a strike.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul William, nee Irene Frume, who have made their home in Daly City, are now residing at the Ed Williams home on the corner of Bryant and Washington streets, Colma.

Mr. and Mrs. V. Rossi entertained Mr. and Mrs. S. Fischer and daughter Sylvia and Bennie Haubrich on Friday evening of last week. A delightful evening was spent, after which dainty refreshments were served.

They all returned with a smile and the limit of ducks, and more than their limit of mud, which was the end of a perfect outing.

The whist tournament to be held by the members of the Colma Volunteer Fire Department starts this Saturday evening, January 11, at Jefferson hall. a Large attendance is expected, as the tournament last year proved very successful.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Kneese, county clerk, has appointed her deputies for registration this year, as every one who is eligible to vote must re-register. The registration is open for a limited time, so every one should register early and do their duty as a citizen and vote.

GIRLS' CLUB OF COLMA ENTERTAINED AT SUPPER

Last Wednesday evening, January 8, the members of the Girls' Club of Colma were entertained at a delicious supper specially prepared by Mrs. Franklin Lambertson, at the home of her father, Mr. Thomas Lee, of Clara and Washington streets. This affair was the first meeting and the reopening of the Girls' Club 1930 session. The regular form of business was transacted after the serving of supper. Much praise was bestowed upon Mrs. Lambertson for her excellent cooking.

Plans are being made for a huge whist party that will take place in March at the Colma Community Center building, on Dunk street, by the Girls' Club. This is an annual affair, the proceeds of which are donated by the Girls' Club to the Veterans' hospital at Palo Alto for the renewal of magazine subscriptions for the veterans who did their duty duirng the World war, as much pleasure is derived from the good reading matter which is to be found in these magazines.

Those enjoying Mrs. Lambertson's hospitality were Mrs. M. P. Brown, Mrs. A. M. Sheldon, Mrs. Pauline Shinazy, Mrs. Alice Volkman, Mrs. Josephine Lambertson, Miss Elsie Wilke, Miss Emily Wilke, Miss Alice Thiel, Miss Bertha Thiel, and Miss Anna Kennedy.

Further details of the Girls' Club whist party will appear in the Daly City Record, so watch for the date, as these parties are always well attended and looked forward to with much pleasure.

On January 22 the Girls' Club will meet at the home of Mrs. M. P. Brown. A most interesting business meeting is planned, which has been set for 7 p. m.

TRAFFIC SAFETY CAMPAIGN OPENED FOR THE NEW YEAR

The California Committee on Public Safety has launched its 1930 traffic safety campaign with a program for January devoted to observance of the right-of-way rule. The slogan for the month is "Yield the Right-of-Way; Waste a Minute, Save a Life."

The California highway patrol, under Superintendent Eugene W. Biscailuz and the police departments of major cities, are co-operating in the campaign. Following an educational campaign, arrests will be made in the latter part of the month for violation of the right-of-way rule.

The California Committee on Public Safety is composed of representatives of some forty state-wide organizations and state departments concerned with the traffic problem, and the committee's goal is reduction of the traffic accident toll.

THE GOLDEN RULE

What is the Golden Rule?

We as individuals frequently break this rule. Such instances as our attitude toward Chinatown, North Beach, East Oakland, the different foreigners that we come in contact with, are very poor examples of the Rule.

Again the attitude of the United States toward China and Russia, the attitude of England toward certain of her possessions in Africa, are other good examples.

One good example is the story of the Good Samaritan.

It is said that the Golden Rule is the Primitive Command of God in the heart of all nations.

Come Sunday evening at 7 to Calvary Baptist church, 5724 Mission street, and learn more about this Rule. You will enjoy the topic and the other features of the meeting. Come. B. Y. P. U. is for young people. I. L. S.

It was not generally known that Henry Ford was an office holder until he resigned recently from the Dearborn school board, after serving for sixteen years. Uncle Henry appears to have taken an interest in education, in spite of his repeated statement that "history is bunk."

SIDELIGHTS

Jack Johnson, negro, former world's heavyweight champion, has been leading a jazz band at a New Haven dance hall lately. This new occupation of the onetime slugger came to general notice when he asked the city attorney to help collect his unpaid salary a few days ago and was turned down.

A strange will was that of Wellington Lytle, recent Milwaukee suicide: "My body to science, my soul to Andrew W. Mellon, and my sympathy to my creditors." Why he so strangely remembered the Secretary of the Treasury was not explained.

Bomb No. 105 of Chicago's 1929 series failed to reach its mark when exploded in the home of Charles W. Piazza, a barber, a few days ago. When the incident occurred Piazza was in a hospital, where his wife had just given birth to a son.

Several persons may have all winter jobs if a recommendation of a Budapest humane society is carried out. Because of a mad dog scare the society has asked that the city's 40,000 dogs be vaccinated against rabies.

In spite of regulatory laws, fake medicines and impure foods continue to be marketed on a large scale. Government authorities report that during 1929 no less than 276 worthless "remedies" and 625 impure foods were seized.

A thing we have long suspected is stated as a fact by Dr. Janet Rankin of Columbia University, who declares that English spelling is "a huge joke on somedoy," probably on the schoolboy.

Possibly all the advice we hear about being prompt is the "bunk." Mayor Jimmie Walker of New York is notorious for being late on all occasions, yet his salary has just been raised from $25,000 a year to $40,000.

The patience of Policeman Nordgaard of Minneapolis deserves a better reward. After waiting every night for two weeks behind the counter of a store that hed been frequently robbed, the bandit appeared at last and proceeded to loot the till. Nordgaard pulled the trigger, the gun failed to fire, and the robber got away with $50.

Delores Lee Dudley of New Philadephia, Ohio, has attained considerable fame as an evangelist at the age of 15.

Fully five million school children listen to the nationwide broadcast of music appreciation concerts conducted by Walter Damrosch every Friday morning.

Ramona Carpenter, 15 months old, of Los Angeles, has amazed physical culture experts with her athletic stunts.

Catherine Walker, aged 8, of Lancaster, Wis., fell 30 feet through a hay chute to a concrete floor while chasing a cat, but was only slightly hurt. The cat was killed by the fall.

Jeannette Gamble of Coffeyvile, Kan., won the national girl championship for the most stylish and economical complete costume at the 4-H club congress in Chicago. Her outfit cost $20.80.

Arlington Davis, aged 14, of Emporia, Kan., a fourth cousin of President Hoover, has become a Senate page by appointment of Senator Allen.

Richard House, a little waif from a babies' home in Knoxville, Tenn., was "adopted" a year ago by girl students of the University of Tennessee, when he was so puny that it seemed he could not live. Now, at the age of 17 months, he is a robust, healthy child.

Little King Micheal of Rumania recently was permited to wear his first pair of long pants on his 8th birthday.

DERMICOL
The Antiseptic Skin Cream of Merit.
An Antiseptic, Astringent Cream for the Skin and the Complexion.—For Men, Women and Children.

If you want your skin to be in a healthful condition, you can not afford to be without this Cream. Just as important as washing one's self. A little of this Cream, when properly rubbed in until thoroughly absorbed, fanning while doing so, will prevent and heal Chapped Hands, Face, Lips, Tan, Sunburn, Freckles or any roughness of the skin. It has absolutely no equal, leaving the skin soft and smooth.

Ladies should use it before applying face powder. It prevents any injurious effects to the skin and renders the powder to be almost invisible.

Gentlemen will find it a superior application for the face after shaving, to prevent razor pimples or any roughness.

Also an excellent application for Mosquito and Flea bites, itching of the skin, or from that annoying skin trouble Exzema and Poison Oak.

After the bath, either in fresh or salt water, apply DERMICOL, when the skin is dry, rubbing it into the skin as directed to prevent Sunburn.

It is far superior to Glycerine, Camphor Ice, Cold Cream, or any of the many preparations containing ingredients which destroy the beauty and texture of the skin. It is not greasy or sticky, and gloves may be worn after Cream is properly applied.

If DERMICOL meets with your approval, as it has to many, then tell your friends about it. They will certainly appreciate your recommendation.

DERMICOL should be obtainable in your local Drug Store, and if not, then send Thirty-five cents by mail and we will forward one three ounce bottle of DERMICOL Antiseptic Skin Cream to you at once.

URGES BUSINESS FIRMS TO CHECK UP OPERATORS

Good will fostered and built by heavy advertising expenditures very often may be destroyed through some comparatively small detail which business executives have overlooked.

A recent issue of the Chicago, Ill., Class calls attention to the fact that the telephone girl in an office may be a big asset to the house which employs her, or she may be an equally big liability. Frequently she is the latter, without any suspicion on the part of the company that she is offsetting effectively the sum total of efforts on the part of their advertising department. A careful check should be made by business houses to find out if their advertising efforts are being injured by some telephone operator who takes the wrong attitude in her relations to the outside public and who, thereby, creates a feeling of resentment or antagonism, rather than of good will towards the concern.

She began, right straight forward and sensible: "I knew that was in the letter, and I longed to destroy it, on that account, but I was afraid. I knew that its d'sappearance would throw all sorts of suspicions on me. But this morning, when I saw the thing, right there on her desk, the temptation was too great. I never thought of her having made a copy of it. This afternoon, when I heard her at the typewriter—I knew. I've been in torment ever since. I have prayed and prayed that she might fail to work out the code. When I came downstairs, just now, I knew that she had not failed. I thought she would tell you about it; so I followed. I thought, perhaps, if I'd tell you both the truth, and plead with you to believe me— But now I am ashamed to offer it.

"You won't believe me. John won't believe me— But, it was only a doll: one of those funny, long-legged, floppy things, with an adorable face. I saw him in Paris, and loved him, and bought him for mine. I called him Christopher Clover, and said that he was my husband—because I had always said that I would never marry. Lewis—he was so horrid about everything—used to tease me about my lover, until I got so tired of it, and so ashamed, that I put him away on a closet shelf.

"After we were all packed, and the trunks were locked, that last day, I found him there on the shelf. Gaby wanted me to carry him on my arm—that was done quite a bit over there. She thought it was chic; but I thought it looked silly. I was going to leave him in the apartment; but Lewis asked me to let him have him. I did. That is all. But—will you let me see the copy of the letter? Gaby read it to me only once."

I gave it to her.

"See," she said, eagerly, "he calls me righteous. See how he speaks of the doll and his—Lili. He wouldn't have spoken like that about a man, nor said that he was behaving himself. See, too, he calls me a nun. If you'll be fair—it seems to me you can easily believe me."

"Honey child," I said, and spoke the truth. "I do believe you. I believe every word you've told us."

"And you?" she appealed to Miss MacDonald.

"Your explanation is reasonable. You have told the truth about everything else in the letter. Certainly, I shall give you the benefit of the doubt."

"You won't tell John," Danny pleaded.

"Of course not. Nor anyone else, just now. Shall we go back to the house?"

Danny and I sat still.

"I'll run along, then," she said, and went away without us.

"Danny," I began at once, "you take my advice. You get to John as quickly as you can and tell him the truth about this."

"Have you noticed," she questioned, slowly, "that John has been different—very different, ever since—"

"We've all been different, dear," I told her.

"Yes, I know. But—John has been more different. Mary, tell me, am I

"Men Don't Wear Well in Times of Trouble."

silly? Have you noticed that John seems to be very much interested in this Miss MacDonald?"

"Danny," I said, "it is just this. Men don't wear well in times of trouble. They can't help it. It is the way they are made. So we women put up with it. We have to, if we put up with men at all. Everything is going to come out all right. But I want you to tell John, yourself, about your doll and not wait for some one else to do it."

"I'll try to," she agreed. "But we are so rarely alone together any more."

CHAPTER XV

Another Murder

Canneziano did not come down for breakfast the following morning. I thought that a little strange, for meals were the one thing he had been real polite to ever since he had been on the Desert Moon.

As soon as breakfast was over, Miss MacDonald spoke to Sam and asked him, as she had asked him that first morning, if she might detain him. "You, also, Mrs. Magin," she smiled at me.

"I wonder," she said, as soon as we three were alone together, "if Mr. Canneziano could have given us the slip, last night? Will you go and see whether or not he is in his room, now, Mr. Stanley?"

Sam went. When he came back he had to draw a lot more than usual to keep his voice steady. "His door is locked. He doesn't answer when I pound on it."

Miss MacDonald said, "I have an excellent pass key. Let's go up and try it."

Curiosity dragged me along with her and Sam, though every bone in my body protested.

Miss MacDonald's key unlocked the door. The three of us went into the room.

The blinds were tightly drawn. The electric fan was whirring and buzzing away in the gray gloom.

Miss MacDonald crossed the room, quickly, and snapped up the blinds. Sam walked to the bed where Canneziano was lying huddled up under the covers. I looked the other way.

I heard the rattle of Sam's pipe as it fell on the floor. I heard the rustle of Miss MacDonald's quick movement. I heard a queer, throaty note that she uttered. Something dragged my hot, aching eyes open. I looked toward the bed. I saw Canneziano's swollen, discolored face. I saw the deep yellow throat, with great brutal bruises at its base.

I felt Sam's strong hands on my shoulders, pressing me down into a chair. I heard myself saying, shrilly, over and over, "What are we going to do? What are we going to do?"

It was Miss MacDonald's voice, cold and clear as spring water that brought me to my senses. "We are going to find the murderer on the Desert Moon ranch."

Sam said, "You're d—n right we are. And we are going to have half a dozen he-men detectives on this place by tomorrow night."

"Very well," Miss MacDonald answered. "Will you telephone, at once, for the coroner, Mr. Stanley?"

"H—l!" Sam said.

I had my face covered; but there was a hollowness in that oath of Sam's that told me, plainer than any looking at him could have told me, that he was frightened; scared to the marrow of his bones.

It took Miss MacDonald, though, to understand the reason for his fear.

"Yes, Mr. Stanley," she said, "these men, when they come this time, in spite of their friendship for you, are not going to be as easily satisfied as they were last time. They were able to blink at one murder. They can't keep on blinking. They dare not—even in Nevada."

"Who wants them to blink?" Sam bluffed.

"You do. We all do, for the present."

Sam did not answer that. He stood, and looked stupid.

"Won't you listen to reason," she urged, "before you go downstairs to telegraph for other detectives? If, when the coroner and the others arrive today, you confess that no progress has been made, they will undoubtedly step in and take matters into their own bungling hands. I think that they would make an arrest. That would be fatal, now. For I am positive that they would arrest an innocent person, and that the guilty person would then have an excellent opportunity for escape.

"I have a certain reputation, Mr. Stanley, and these men—particularly the sheriff—respect it. If you will keep me on this case, I will tell them that I am making definite progress. That I believe I shall be able to turn the criminal over to the state within a comparatively short time—"

"Would that be the truth?" Sam demanded.

She hesitated. "If you mean, is that what I believe now—my answer is yes. I may be wrong. I have, at least, a very definite suspicion. I have no proofs."

"You wouldn't," Sam questioned, "give these men that assurance if you knew that I was going to get some men detectives up here to work with you?"

"I couldn't," she said. "I can speak only for myself. Please give me my chance. Do you realize what it means to be tried for a murder, even if one is acquitted? I am not asking this for myself. I wouldn't stoop to beg for anything for myself as I am begging for this, now. I am sure you mean to be a fair man. Be fair to me, and to all of the innocent people here on your ranch. I don't say that other detectives might not be able to discover the murderer. I do say that I am certain they would do irreparable harm before they succeeded."

"If you stayed," Sam had the cheek to question, "and worked along with them—that was my idea—couldn't you prevent their doing any harm?"

"I could try to. I will try to, if you insist. But I am doubtful of my success. Consciously, or unconsciously they work against me, because I am a woman. You don't know them as I do. You don't know their methods, as I do. If you feel that you must have others here, working on the case, allow me to send, at my own expense, for my own assistants; the girls whom I have trained—"

"We don't need any more girls around here," Sam said. "It is pretty certain that we do need some one to protect the lives of all of us on this place—"

"When you telephone for the coroner," she said, "won't you telephone for a locksmith to come out with him, and bring strong bolts for all the doors—"

"You admit, then, that we are all in danger?"

"Nothing of the sort. You are all perfectly safe—at present. I do believe that before long, my own life may be in danger. I want no one to think that I suspect that. I need the protection of the bolts. It must seem that I think that every one needs the protection."

"You believe," Sam questioned, "that your own life in is danger. And yet—"

"Please reconsider, Mr. Stanley. Please allow me to have the case alone, at any rate for a little while longer."

"You honestly think," he questioned, "that you can manage this single handed, and keep us all safe, and produce this murderer—pretty shortly?"

"I do, Mr. Stanley. Mary, can't you say something. Won't you help me to persuade Mr. Stanley?"

"You don't need any help," I told her. "He's persuaded."

"Is that true, Mr. Stanley? May I have the case alone, for a little while longer?" She was all breathless with eagerness.

"Drat it all, yes," Sam said. "I'm d—d if I know what I ought to do. But you are dead game. I— Well, shake on it, Miss MacDonald. You'll do the best you can for us, I know."

The hand she held out to him was trembling, and her voice as she thanked him trembled. But still I was amazed when, right after Sam had gone out of the room, she said to me, "Mary, I believe on my soul that I have just had an experience that is too strong for me," and hid her face in the crook of her arm and began to cry.

* * * * * * * *

In the week that followed I had times of thinking that Sam had likely made a mistake in keeping Miss MacDonald on, alone.

I couldn't begin to describe the horror of that week. It is, I suppose, what books call a paradox to say that the worst thing about the week was that nothing, just nothing, happened. To all outward appearances the Desert Moon ranch was as peaceful as an empty grave; hollow peace, false peace, and all of us conniving at the falsity made it worse.

Sam locked up the house early every evening. Then, trying to make it casual, one and another of us would go sauntering around to make sure that he hadn't overlooked a door, or a window. People were constantly jumping, and starting, and looking behind them at nothing. None of us women ever went far from the house, except Mrs. Ricker, who went every day to visit Martha's grave. She went alone. I would not have gone with her, not for any price. I was afraid of her. I was afraid of Hubert Hand. By Wednesday of that week I was afraid of every one in the house except Miss MacDonald and Sam. Friday found me doubtful of Sam. None of our minds went straight, those days. I am sure that the mind of each one of us on the place—always excepting Miss MacDonald's—did as mine did. It went groping in the dark; it bumped into obstacles of doubt; it tripped over fear and fell into senseless stupidities; it lost its way, and wandered into wild suspicions. I tell you, there were times, during those frightful days, when I found myself seriously considering whether or not I had committed the two murders.

At that moment I was certain that every one on the place was more or less insane, especially Miss MacDonald. I think yet that I was right about the others. I know, now, that I was wrong about Miss MacDonald; but she had certainly given me plenty of reasons for thinking either that she had lost her senses entirely, or else that she had never had any to lose.

All week I could see Sam watching her and growing more and more impatient. On Thursday he said to me that she was too busy flirting with John to have time for anything else. That was not fair. She didn't flirt with John—she wasn't the sort who would flirt with anyone. But she surely did begin to notice him, and his attentions to her.

I tried to make excuses for John. Poor little Danny wasn't, I had to admit, much like the girl he had fallen in love with. She had lost practically all of her prettiness, and she looked, all the time, too white and wan and generally dragged out to seem quite wholesome.

She had explained to John about the reference to her and to her doll in the code letter. He had taken it all right, and had been, as she said to me, "sweet" about it, and never doubting her word at all. Still, I sort of thought that a grain of suspicion might still be bothering him. And I knew that he had not been quite able to forgive her, not for telling of her suspicions concerning Sam, but for suspecting Sam in the first place.

On Friday morning, when Sam came zigzagging into my kitchen, ordered Zinnia out of it, his voice all thick and husky, he fell down into a chair. "Mary," he said, "we've got the report from the 'Frisco chemists."

Miss MacDonald had thought it necessary to have Martha's body exhumed and sent to San Francisco. That is what the coroner and the undertaker had been about on their second trip to the ranch. Sam had not wanted Mrs. Ricker to know. That had suited Miss MacDonald better, too; so they had had the men do the work while we were all at dinner that day. They had been careful to fix the grave so that it would not show that it had been disturbed; and then, being men, they had left their shovels right there in the cabin for the first person to find. As you know, the first person had been Mrs. Ricker.

We had been waiting ever since for the chemists' report. Sam's first words were reassuring.

"It is too good to be true," he said, and repeated, dazedly, "too good to be true. Miss MacDonald had her assistants trace the prescription from Doctor Roe. The powders were harmless. I didn't cause my girl's death. The report proves—Miss MacDonald says— The report proves—"

"Take it easy, Sam. What does the report prove?"

"Somebody gave her a deadly poison. The chemists found two traces. One they can't analyze. That's why they've kept us waiting so long for the report. They are still working on it, hoping for results. The other was nitrobenzene. Miss MacDonald says that, in small doses, induces coma and takes as long as twenty-four hours to act. But it is apt not to be deadly by itself. It was combined with this other drug—the one that must have made death certain."

Miss MacDonald came hurrying into the kitchen. She was holding the monkey charm bracelet in her hand.

"See here," she said, "this bangle thing opens. I think we can be certain that the poison she took, or was given, came out of it. There is a trace of the odor. Smell it."

She handed it to me. It smelled a little like shoe polish, with sort of a faint almond flavoring, underneath. I gave it to Sam, who had been reaching out his hand for it. He smelled it, and then knotted it up in his fist.

Remembering, I can't think of anything that he said which would do to quote. The gist of it was, that if Gaby had given Martha the poison, he was not sorry that Gaby had been killed, because justice had been done. Not satisfied with that, he expressed, violently, his regrets that vengeance had been taken out of his hands.

"It isn't vengeance you want, Mr. Stanley," Miss MacDonald reminded him, pretty sternly, "but justice. That is within our reach. I am practically certain that the person who poisoned Martha, who strangled Miss Canneziano and her father, is right here on this place. My work from now on is to get the proof. If you would help me, instead of—"

Sam interrupted, his whole body straining forward with his eagerness. "Tell us who he is, and where he is, and we'll help you, right enough."

"I can't tell you. Not unless you want to have still another murder on the Desert Moon ranch. But you can help me. First, by keeping the discovery of the poison a secret. Second, by allowing every one else on the place to suppose that I am still in a state of entire bafflement concerning the crime. Third, and most important, perhaps, by having patience with me."

"Ye'a," Sam said, "and while we are sitting around, having patience, this bird will walk off to some green hill far away. I think the boys are doing their best to guard the place, but this bird's a slicker. What's to keep him from, say, dressing in my clothes some night, and riding merrily away on Bobbie Burns or Wishbone? All he'd have to do is to give the boys a high-sign and they'd let him ride to h—l, if they thought he was me. Another thing—I can't trust all my punchers. Some of them are greasers, some half-breeds. Money, and not much of it, talks pretty loud to some of those boys."

"At present, the person I suspect has no intention of leaving the place."

"When you don't know anything else, how can you know that?"

"I didn't say that I didn't know anything else."

"Do you know, and will you tell me, why you can't put this fellow where the dogs won't bite him, while you are collecting the proof, evidence, and so on that you think you need?"

"For one reason, because I am not a police detective. Sometimes it is necessary to use their methods of arresting each suspect and getting the evidence afterward—third degrees, so on. That method, by the way, accounts for the number of criminals who are able to make complete escapes. It is a stupid, bungling method—and a brutal one. I detest it. I have used it only twice in the seven years that I have been in this work. I used it then because it was necessary. I will not use it now, because it is not necessary. This case will come to the grand jury complete, with indisputable proofs. If I had known—suspected I mean, before Mr. Canneziano was killed, what I now suspect—" She stopped short, evidently afraid of saying too much.

"Ye'a," Sam argued, "but what I can't get, is how you think you are ever going to find the proof."

"Well—" she began. "Because," she finished, quite tartly, and walked out of the room.

"'Because,'" Sam mimicked, almost before she was out of hearing distance. "It was a black day for me, and for the Desert Moon, when I put this thing up to a 'because' woman."

I more than half agreed with him, but I was not going to let him know it. "Did you notice," I questioned, chiefly to turn his mind from the subject of "because" women, "that she kept saying that she thought the person she suspected was on the place? I mean—she didn't say that he was living in the house."

"House! H—l! Of course she didn't say house. Why should she say house? Haven't we been over and over it? Aren't we fair frazzled out, every last one of us, from climbing up those front and back stairs, with our minds, all day long and half the night? Counting minutes, counting seconds; going to the barn and back, over and over. Nobody who lives in this house could have done it. That is settled. That is fact. Not unless some one of us was able to be in two places at the same time between four and five o'clock that day."

Something clicked in my mind. I declare to goodness, I felt the click, plain as a twinge of toothache. It scared me. I put both my hands over the place in the front of my head. I felt as dazed, and as shaken, as if I had been sleep-walking, and had bumped into a door, in the dark, and wakened to find myself in a strange brightly lighted room.

Old Customs Dear to Hearts of Britishers

The archbishop who lives at Lambeth palace is a very kind archbishop. the poor of the district will tell you. Every Thursday at the main gateway 30 half-crowns are distributed to 30 poor people of the parish. The custom is a very old one. Years ago it took another form. On Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays 15 quartern loaves of bread, 9 stone of beef (made into broth and served in pitchers) and 5 shillings' worth of halfpennies were the gifts. One is reminded of this and other quaint customs, surviving or revived, by the fact that the lord mayor of London revived the Boy Players a few weeks ago. They gave a performance at Salters' hall, the first since 1608, when they were the favorite players of Queen Elizabeth. The Salters' company is named after John Salter, who died in 1605. Formerly a service to his memory, held each year, took the form of a procession to his tomb, upon which each person knocked with a stick, and called three times in a loud voice: "How do you do, Brother Salter? I hope you are well." —London Mail.

Father of Basket Ball

The game basket ball was invented and developed by Dr. James Naismith, for many years athletic director of the University of Kansas. In 1891, when he was an assistant athletic director at Springfield, Mass., it was suggested to Doctor Naismith that there should be a game suitable for the indoor development of athletes who had played football all fall. Basket ball was the result and by 1893 there was a book of rules and competition was being developed.

World's Largest Tree

The following are the dimensions of the Boole tree, which is said to be the largest tree in the world: Diameter at the ground slanting, 35 feet; diameter at right angles to the tree and level with the upper side, 31 feet; diameter above knots, swells or bulges at 16 feet high, 25 feet; diameter at first limb, 156 feet (at 14 feet); height, 261½ feet. M. A. Beckwith, who prepared a set of tables on all the famous "largest in the world" trees, figures from the diameter of the Boole tree, where it is broken off at the top, that it once rose probably 320 feet high.

MOSCOW'S GREAT BELLS

It is an interesting fact that the two largest bells in the world, one weighing more than 200 tons and the other 128 tons, are both in Moscow. No other bell weighs more than 80 tons.

The larger of the Moscow bells was cast in 1733, but either in the founding or shortly after it cracked and an eleven ton piece fell out. One story is that it was successfuly cast and hung, but fell to the ground when the scaffold burned, and cracked when firemen threw water on it. At all events it lay imbedded in the earth for about a century, when it was raised onto a pedestal, where it served as a chapel, the opening made by the broken fragment being used as the door.

This bell, known as the "Tsar Kolokol," is 19 feet 3 inches in height, 60 feet 9 inches in circumference, and its greatest thickness is two feet.

The second Moscow bell, the largest in actual use, was given to the cathedral by Czar Boris Godunoff, while a third, cast in 1819, weighs 80 tons. There is one of 80 tons in Burma, also.

Contrasted with these great bells, the famous Big Ben of London, weighing 13½ tons, would appear diminutive. A bell in Montreal weighs the same as Big Ben, and is the largest in the Western Hemisphere.

FISH AND GAME NOTES

By J. H. NEUSTADT

If all the people appreciated the vast importance of our fisheries there would be a more united effort to conserve this valuable gift of nature.

In 1927 fresh fish and shell fish caught in California reached the total of 517,000,000 pounds, and this was exclusive of the sportsmen's catch, which was unrecorded.

The money value in this state alone was $52,000,000, and the sport accorded amateurs and their families is beyond compdte.

The work accomplished by the Fish Commission is astonishing in its total as within two years eleven hundred streams and ditches were screened, over 400 fishways were installed, 13 new hatcheries installed and the millions of young fish artificially propogated have been distributed over 26,000 miles of streams and 10,000 lakes.

In 1926, over 11,000,000 Chinook salmon were planted in the Sacramento river alone, and an almost equal number in preceding years, yet the catch has fallen so low that recent figures were reduced far below any previous record.

The Associated Sportsmen of California, of which our San Mateo Club is a part, were instrumental in importing many thousand Atlantic salmon for distribution on this Pacific coast, yet there is everywhere a falling off and this emphasises the necessity of careful conservation and propagation and the co-operation of all the people if we are to retain the God given blessing of fish food.

Not so long ago the general public was laboring under the delusion that a conservationist was a fellow who was equipped with a long face, sideburns, an unlimited supply of "dont's" and an ambition to prevent sportsmen from enjoying themselves in hunting and fishing.

But as the idea of game restoration spreads over these United States, as the teachings of the necessity for the preservation of wild life resources are being broadcast, the general public is beginning to say to itself, "After all there must be something in all this talk about conservation."

Conservation is no strange, new cult. It doesn't demote the hardy gunner to a pacifist or cause the ardent angler to scrap his tackle and quit the streams and lakes he loves.

Conservation doesn't mean restriction. It means commone sense preservation. It contemplates more sport for all decent sportsmen. It means taking no more than the game law say you may take, or, more sensibly, what your own sense of grub supply and fair play tells you is enough. Conservation means simply the old Golden Rule applied to game and fish and your fellow men. It revives the flavor and romance of the spirit of hunting.

The conservationist, therefore, is the fellow who is thinking about such matters and trying to interest others in them. He isn't standing around and "letting George do it." He is taking an active part in improving conditions in his neighborhood or district. There is absolutely nothing mysterious about conservation.

MOTORISTS WARNED TIME SHORT TO GET LICENSES

With but a few days left for California motorists to renew automobile licenses, the estimte of the number of new plates issued indicates that some thousands of car owners will be trying to apply in one grand rush in the last few days.

The official ending of the license renewal period is January 15—next Wednesday. Motorists driving without 1930 licenses or having no temporary certificate or receipt indicating that they have applied for new licenses, will be subject to arrest by state or county officers after next Wednesday. And after January 31, they will have to pay double the usual fee.

So it behooves tardy motorists to obtain their plates now, and escape the big rush of the last few days.

The procedure is simple. The white certificate of registration and the $3 fee, or $3.50 and the pink certificate, f the white is lost, are the requirements for renewal of registration.

Motorists who have paid off their indebtedness to finance companies during the year and now own their cars are required to have the ownership officially transferred by the state to their own names. The pink slip of ownership and an extra one dollar fee are necessary for this operation.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET

Tells How to Darken Hair With a Home-Made Mixture.

Joicey Williams, the well-known American actress, recently made the following statement about gray hair, and how to darken it, with a home-made mixture:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray, streaked or faded hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."
